

Stay'n Alive CPR Training- Twenty two people attended a free CPR training course for local residents at Swedish Hospital in Ballard in early October. The PACE group did community outreach to recruit participants from low-income and underrepresented populations that can now help make their neighborhoods a safer place.

CD Forever- PACE participants set up booths outside the Red Apple on 23rd and Jackson to share information about local organizations and collect survey data from community members in the Central District. The information gathered from their survey has helped the City of Seattle find ways to work more effectively in that neighborhood.

Autumn Moon Festival- The Autumn Moon Festival celebration in Chinatown/International District takes place every year in September. The PACE group planned an event for local kids and families to enjoy live music and performers, create arts and crafts, and come together with their neighbors.

Sounds of South Park- Fiestas Patrias is an annual celebration of independence for many Latin American countries. PACE group members worked with the South Park Community Center and many other organizations to bring local musicians, art activities, and games to the neighborhood parade.

Fun Meet at the Market- Throughout the summer, you can find a weekly farmers market in Lake City where people come to buy fresh produce and homemade treats. The PACE participants invited community groups and local organizations to set up tables at the market and connect with residents who may not know much about the resources in their neighborhood.

Voting Awareness for Communities of East African Origin- PACE participants visited community meetings for various East-African groups around South Seattle. They handed out translated materials about the importance of voting, election information and ways to become more civically engaged.

Community Re-connection- A group of young volunteers joined the PACE group and went door to door in the High Point neighborhood to find out how residents are building and sustaining relationships within their community and with service providers. After the information was analyzed, they organized a potluck to facilitate community introductions and share the knowledge that was created.
